

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR

CPYRGHT

E. 277,505

APR 20 1966

St. Paul Man Freed of U.S. Charges

The Justice Department Tuesday dismissed charges that a St. Paul truck driver alternately posed as an Air Force officer and an agent of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

The defendant is David E. Barker, 36, alias Ralph J. Davis, no permanent address.

The government also dismissed a charge that Barker obtained money from his wife's relatives while posing as a CIA agent.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR

E. 277,505

APR 20 1966

LBJ's Alma Mater Hears Other Side

CPYRGHT

Herald Tribune News Service

San Marcos, Tex.

Somewhat to his consternation, President Johnson has learned that his college alma mater is importing guest speakers critical of the administration.

Visiting Southwest Texas State College, Mr. Johnson asked student leaders to describe current campus activity.

"Well, we've just heard Tom Ross," the student body president, Kelly Frels, replied.

Ross is a co-author of "The Invisible Government," a book about the Central Intelligence Agency.

"What did he talk about? I want to hear this," the President is reported by a person present to have said.

"Well, he said the CIA has grown too powerful," Frels said.

"I don't think so," Mr. Johnson said. He then suggested that other speakers from Washington would be available to speak on the campus — where he studied in the late twenties. His list included CIA director William Raborn, his White House press secretary, Bill Moyers, the White House science adviser, Donald Horning, and Jack Valenti, White House special assistant.

Valenti gained wide publicity last year when he made a speech in Boston in which he maintained that Mr. Johnson possessed a "special gland" and admitted that he slept a little better knowing that Lyndon Johnson was his President.